Eulogy Delivered For Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. April 9, 1968 By Mr. Bernard P. McMahon

Today we pause to honor the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. In retrospect the words of President Johnson on March 31st come to mind, "United we stand, divided we fall," which makes one wonder when will the division end? When will the forces of bigotry, intolerance, prejudice, bias, ignorance and insanity cease?

The twentieth century has witnessed more medical, scientific and technological advances since the beginning of time. Yet the social progress is ever so slow, practically motionless. The needless persecution of minority groups such as the millions of Russians unnecessarily slaughtered in the mid 30's through Stalin's purges. The millions of Jews exterminated in the gas ovens of Hitler. Violence begets violence, and Dr. King deplored violence, and violence caused his death.

The American Negro was not an emigrant to America. He was forcibly brought here by Yankee sea captains who seized on the fast buck. He was sold into slavery and became the cheap commodity of the southern planter. All family ties, all roots were viciously plucked from his way of life. He ceased to be part of humanity. This was supposed to have ended one hundred years ago. The Negro is supposed to be free. Legally he is. Socially and economically he is not. Yet there is a decided color blindness in the United States today. Some men can see a blue sky, green grass, yellow bananas, purple mountains, golden sunshine, red sunset—even a flag of red, white and blue, but fail to see a black man.

Some say, "Sure the Negro should have a job, if it isn't in my firm." "These people are entitled to decent housing, but not in my neighborhood." "Certainly I believe in desegrated schools, however I wouldn't want colored youngsters in the school my children attend." It is this duplicity and hypocrisy that Dr. King deplored and dedicated his life under the banner of non-violence. Never did he cry, "Let's get Whitey!" or "Burn, baby, burn!" He loved his fellow man, and this love had its price.

Dr. King is dead, but his work will not die with him. His eyes are closed—pray millions will be opened. His ears will hear no more—may the former deaf hear his plea. His voice is silent—may the multitudes plead his cause. His heart is still—may the hearts of those who still make up America, free from malice and hate, beat with love for their fellow man.

Yes, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. is dead, for he was but a mortal man; but what he represented, though sometimes hidden and obscure, will live forever because of immortality, love, fair play, freedom, dignity, justice and peace. You were a credit to your race, Dr. King, the one true race—the race that creates greatness—the human race.

Dedication

At the end of our freshman year, no one wanted the class of 1968. Mr. James Hanson took over the leadership of our class at a time when he was greatly needed. For two years he worked hard to improve the image of our class and led us successfully through many activities. Therefore, in appreciation, we dedicate to him the Hourglass '68.

Faculty And Administration

To the Class of 1968:

Congratulations on the occasion of your graduation!

Your class holds many fond memories for all of us—memories of academic excellence in the scholastic world, of stellar performances on the football field and behind the footlights, of sound contributions to the development of the extracurricular program in the school, and wistfully of the personal growth of each member in his or her quest toward self-realization.

The School Committee joins with me in extending best wishes to all of you for success and happiness in the years ahead.

Superintendent
Harold S. Shea

School Committee 1st row—Mr. Shea, Mr. Lanni, Miss Imbimbo, Mr. Fay. 2nd row—Mr. Brooks, Mr. Keane, Mr. McNamara, Mr. Pierce.

Principal
Bernard P. McMahon

Congratulations to all of you on your graduation from Wilmington High School. Our wishes for continued success are extended to each of you as your future unfolds.

With the current demonstrations, defiance, dissent, destruction of draft cards and disservice, one might well ask where we are heading. When a law is established, we are bound to observe that law. Freedom of choice, regarding existing laws, can only lead to anarchy. If claimed, let us revise it or repeal it by democratic process. That is the American Way!

Vice-Principal
Harold F. Garrett

Congratulations and best wishes to the graduating class of 1968.

We seem to be facing a world of troublesome and unrestful times. This isn't something that is happening to the graduating classes of today only. Students that are graduating each year have been faced with some major problems nationally, economically, or socially, and have attempted to either find a solution or adjust to them. Regardless of the situation and the times, we find many successful people around us. Only by a strong determination and high standards have they been able to make a success of themselves.

We are told that "What a Man Soweth, That Shall He Also Reap" If the seeds of Happiness and Success are sown and this determination to make these things come to pass are there, then I am sure that we can look forward to a very Happy and Successful Class of 1968.

Best Wishes and Good Luck for a very successful future.

"My parents don't understand me!" This plaintive cry is often heard among young people in our country. The opposite cry, "My children never listen to me!" is common among adults. Yet few people seem to realize that communication between the generations must be a two-way matter, with each side both giving and receiving.

Teenagers often have a point when they claim that their parents allow no time for discussion of problems. Father sometimes is too occupied with his television program to worry about his son's desire for more dating time. Mother, growing older and tired after the day's housework, cares more for her own leisure than for her daughter's anxieties over a new boyfriend. Both apparently take time out only to remind the children to do their homework. In many families, there are few calm exchanges of ideas between the parents and children. For these conversations to take place, parents must find time to talk and listen whenever they are needed.

However, it is impossible to ignore the fact that the young people, not just the adults, contribute to this lapse in understanding. Many teenagers have a habit of "tuning out" everything they don't want to hear, including the disapproving words of their parents. They don't understand that adults are human, too, and want attention when they speak or give advice. Especially after working all day, parents are very sensitive, and children should be conscious of this fact. They must realize that Mother has just as much desire to discuss the book she is reading as her daughter has to praise her latest singing idol. Each should really listen to the other if she wishes any attention when she speaks herself.

Beside the initial problem of beginning a discussion, parents and young people face one more major obstacle. That is, many teenagers confuse their desire for understanding with their need for approval. Parents, who have experienced most of the same emotions as their children, probably understand why their son wants to borrow money for a new car and why their daughter insists on dating an attractive boy despite his bad reputation. However, they may not approve of these actions, and refuse to allow them to occur. Taking offense immediately, their hurt children feel misunderstood, although they are in truth totally understood. Before they complain, young people must try to be reasonable themselves when considering the opinions of their parents.

All these problems affect us in the graduating class. Many of us will continue living with out families as children. We will need to promote understanding and communication in the family by truly listening to our parents and encouraging them to listen to us. Other members of the class will marry within a few years and start families of their own. As parents they will be faced with the problem of understanding the feelings of their children and trying to advise the youngsters reasonably as they grow up. But, no matter in which position we find ourselves, we must remember that family communication always carries a two-way requirement. Both generations must cooperate, listening and understanding, if either group is to feel happy with the other.

Can you answer the following riddle? What did Negroes obtain in 1870, women in 1920, and any American who can read and isn't in jail is eligible to receive at age 21? The answer, obviously, the right to vote. A simple riddle, yet our American right to vote is perhaps one of this country's most valuable institutions. We as American citizens have basic rights—the freedom of speech, and of religion; the right to assemble, and right to elect people to represent us. There seems to be a preoccupation with our rights today. Why are our rights as citizens constantly emphasized but never our responsibilities? Many people today demand their rights. They cry out constantly that they're being denied their rights. Few ever seem to remember that basic responsibilities go along with rights. As John D. Rockefeller said, "I believe that every right implies a responsibility; every opportunity, an obligation, every possession, a duty."

Last March 2nd, Election Day, only 1819 out of a possibly 6657 registered voters in Wilmington or, twenty-seven per cent bothered to take a few minutes out of their busy schedules to vote. One reason advanced as an explanation for this poor showing was the lack of competition among candidates for major offices. There were no controversial issues or candidates to draw voters to the polls. And yet this is no excuse for not voting. It just points up another problem prevalent in our American democracy, the lack of interested candidates to run for local offices. Were any foreigner to view our election of last March, he might easily become dubious about the support our election system receives. Three candidates contested for two school committee openings and four candidates for two selectman openings. A high percentage of local interest? Wilmington's budget this year is higher than ever before. More money is being spent. And yet out of the town's voting population only 27% cast their ballots. Do the others really have any moral right to complain about any actions taken by town officials if they haven't even taken the time to vote? In a democracy we not only have a right but a responsibility to vote, and a responsibility to run for office if we have the qualifications and interest. An attitude of "Let George do it" will not help to preserve our democracy. It will instead slowly eat away at the quality of leadership found in government and community.

Perhaps not everyone is qualified to be an office holder, but everyone should at least make the most of his democratic privilege and vote. And yet I do not mean to condone the voter who rushes in to obtain his ballot and then picks candidates at random. Irresponsible voting is just as much a crime as simply not voting. It shows not only a shameful apathy but a mockery of everything America stands for. Every voter has a basic responsibility to himself and to his country to inquire deeply into the issues and candidates in any election. February 21, 1968 a candidate's night was held in the high school auditorium. A grand total of forty-six people, were present. On what grounds were the other 1674 basing their vote on Election Day—personal hypothesis, the candidate's reputation, a neighbor's hearsay, or the biggest ad in the town paper? Certainly some knew the candidates personally and thus could make a decision. But what about the great majority unacquainted with every candidate? For a person must know what each candidate stands for before he can vote responsibly.

Certainly then it's obvious something should be done. To provide better leadership for government and community organizations, and to serve as an example to youth, such as this class of 1968, the voters of Wilmington, the U.S., and the world should be awakened to the responsibilities to vote, to look into the candidates, to do our best for our community whether it be in local politics, scouts, or church organizations. The quicker we realize this then our world may begin to move towards the eternal peace for which we all hope and search.

Essay

To the people of Wilmington we seniors of 1968 owe our education. We have been given so much, but the appreciation of three basic concepts, those of truth, beauty and goodness is the greatest reward we have acquired.

Even though none of these concepts has been taught to completion, our introduction to them sends us on our way with a goal in life—that of promoting them even further. Truth, beauty, and goodness—these are three separate ideas yet wonderfully interrelated; and all three, when we strive to accomplish them, lead to one ideal—that of perfection.

Perfection meaning the seeking of truth through knowledge and reason; the constant striving for a beautiful life, one to be admired and respected; and attaining a life with a purpose that of giving, loving and hoping for better things. But like infinity in mathematics, even though we get closer and closer, perfection demands countless improvements.

Our school system has presented to us three basic areas directly correlated to these intangibles. Science and math deduce factual truths from nature. The liberal and fine arts bring to view the beauty of man's cultural outlook; and the social studies learn from the past, observe the present, and mold the future for the good.

Our education has sharpened our sense of alertness—a mental alertness for scientifically observing and analyzing, aesthetically expressing, and righteously improving our world. I believe there is no better use for our acquired tools of knowledge than to study the created natural phenomena around us and to emulate its perfection.

Consider the flowers in the field, the lilies, the clover, the green golden glow of the daffodils, and among them the humming bees darting to and fro on a radiant spring day; and a young calf munching fresh tufts of clover under the beaming sky. Here we have perfectly exemplified a creation of truth, beauty and goodness.

In the case of flowers, truth looms before our eyes. They seem to have been made with such precision, exact structural organization, and purposeful function. For without the flower's miraculous way of making nectar through photosynthesis how could the honey bee produce honey and wax that are so good. From where would come our fruits, vegetables, or even that tuft of clover that the grazing cattle digest to give us milk. Yes, flowers in reality have verified their functional purpose, but with their countless services to man and beast they must also be deemed good. For only the unselfish giving of the flower makes life on earth a possibility.

So the flower is truth, it is goodness, who will doubt its beauty? Using the words of John Keats:

Beauty is a flower.
Beauty is truth—truth is beauty.
That which is good is always beautiful.
Goodness is beauty as well as eternal truth.

Not only do flowers, honeybees and cattle display these virtues but consider the darting swallow who patrols the air for insects, the borrowing worm, or even the rodents of the field—all have their purpose, their beauty and goodness. Even the inanimate shouts out perfection—the fitness of water and air, the exactness of our solid earth—all glorify the Creation.

So let us seek to emulate nature and though perfection will never be reached here on earth, let us use our acquired tools of education, science and math, the arts and social studies. And although we have learned them in separate classrooms, let them not be antagonistic or destructively competitive but as one, so that disregarding none, man may use his creative gifts to perfect this world in the light of truth, beauty, and goodness. So help us God!

Bonnie Drew leaves the girls' basketball team and Miss Dadoly her bronzed sneakers for good luck. Ralph DeLisle leaves his brother his good looks. Jane Loveys leaves one jammed locker to Mr. Fullerton. To future basketball players, Don Miller leaves one very warm bench and a pair of practically unused sneakers. Eddie Topping leaves his gym uniform to Coach Bellissimo. To any other unsuspecting athlete, Dottie Berger leaves one unpadded catcher's mitt, three basketball fingers, and an ace bandage.

To Mr. Pollard, Electronics Class 401 leaves a box of amps, one interchangeable zig-zag, one lightbulb recharger, and a piece of faulty test equipment. Chris and Val leave Room 17 of the Alpine Inn to Milton Cram and Barbara Maloney for next year's ski trip. Kathy Dugay leaves her dirty apron to any underclassman who takes cooking. Kenny Baldwin leaves Carl Capozzi a case of Nutrament. Debbie Patchell leaves her hair dyes to anyone who wants to experiment and have fun.

Steve Young leaves his left sideburn to Mr. Garrett, his right sideburn to Mr. Kelley, and his hair to Mr. McMahon. He also leaves his book, "101 Ways To Sneak Smokes", to Pepe Coolidge. Doug MacCallum leaves six milk bottles to the next occupant of his locker. Linda Smith leaves the typewriters to all the junior typists. Kathy Lounsbury leaves Mr. Kelley a cork for the finger sized hole in one of his desks. Lynda Arsenault leaves Snoopy to Miss Kennedy. She also leaves her three gym suits to anyone who wants them. Barry LeVaas leaves an elastic pacifier to Mr. Roche.

Donna Kirby leaves the first seat, third row, in Mr. Roche's class happily to any future senior girl. Joni Johnson and Betty Jacobsen leave their gym lockers to anyone who can keep from losing the locks. Joni also leaves her gym sneakers to whoever can find them and her cheerleading uniform to her sister Kathy. Judy Klimarchuk leaves Mr. Cripps a very quiet classroom. Charles Medico leaves all the sleep he obtained in Mr. Rombolli's class to Jack Lee. Bill Mutchler leaves his name "Goldenboy" to anyone who is worthy of it. Pam Pearson leaves all her "hang-ons" to any W.H.S. hitchhiker. She also leaves Mr. Dicey and her favorite class to her sister.

To any debating club which might be formed next year, Richard Lyford leaves the hope that it will be more successful than the Lybatum was. Susan Beers would like to leave Mr. Kelley and Miss Lehan each an alarm clock for waking up sleeping students. Cathy Fantasia leaves her four straight years of not getting into any trouble with the office to her brother Stephen. Nancy Reardon, Kathy Dugay, and Linda Cole leave Mrs. Adams a quiet class. Linda also leaves Mr. Fabri a few locks of her red hair for when he goes bald. John Gennetti leaves Bruce McInnis a free trip to Fenway Park and a free lunch anytime he wants one.

Cynthia Enos leaves some slightly used music to anyone lucky enough to have Miss Kalil. She also leaves one Augustinian robe to Declan Berkley for future Christmas shows. English 402 leaves Miss Waitkevich a snake, worm, or armadillo to illustrate poetry. Donald Herrie leaves the crawling to Coach Bellissimo and the animals. To Jayne Doucette, Donna Fagone leaves all the great times in apparatus.

Will

Cathy Filipowicz leaves a pair of earplugs and a bottle of Excedrin to all future proprietors of Room 213 to use when the new N.H.S. members take over Room 215. She also leaves Mr. Kelley six dry liquid pens, Mr. Roche an Oscar for his great acting ability, and Mrs. Baran a Tony award for producing three years of the world's worst French skits.

David Brown leaves Tewksbury High and ten days suspension to Gary Warford. He also leaves Mr. Rombolli happily. French 501 leaves a pile of coats, sweaters, and jackets to Mrs. Baran. Susan Keane leaves Mr. Graceffa's patented pep speeches to any girl foolish enough to play the trumpet. Nancy Jerrett leaves her "Rightguard" to whoever has her gym locker next year. Linda A. Arsenault leaves her collection of four years of math marks to anyone who is willing to take them. Madeleine Curran, Pam Pearson, Louise Birkle, and all the other members leave W.H.S.A.H.C. to anyone who thinks they deserve membership. Bob Barnaby leaves Mr. Roche a glass of milk and some cookies, and to Mr. Dicey he leaves one volume of elementary drafting techniques. He also leaves his homeroom reputation to be topped. Ginny Allen leaves a book entitled "1001 Ways To Skip School Without Getting Caught." Jimmy Briggs leaves his jump rope to Coach Bellissimo, his Mickey Mouse watch to the Mickey Mouse Club, a bottle of "Curl-Free" to Carol, and a spaceship to Mr. Roche so he can get back to his planet faster.

Donna Fagone, Ginny Allen, and Alice Anderson leave a lunch at MacDonald's and a trip through Malden High School to anyone with the courage to take it. Alice also leaves Mr. Roche's class without regret. Steve Gerhartz leaves Dave Brown to next year's senior class and a 3x2 section of sidewalk in front of Friendly's to Gary Warford. Terri Ricci leaves the lunch table to next year's seniors and the best of luck to the football team and cheerleaders. Pat Silva leaves the two goalie cages to Cathy O'Brien. Anne Robertie leaves a can of "Black Flag" in Room 112. David Carlson leaves Mr. Dicey all the equipment that he borrowed for the past four years. Ellen Sicard and Linda Dolan leave the phone booth at the center to anyone stupid enough to hide in it. Pat Barden leaves the Business Club to those who can manage to attend any meeting. Marsha Cantrell leaves her title of class flirt to anyone who thinks it will bring her happiness.

David Knight leaves a map of short cuts to anyone wishing to find success in mathematics, Kelley style. Philip Krey leaves his many N.H.S. privileges to some worthy junior member. He also leaves all the new ideas that the N.H.S. instituted in '68 to be continued. Angela Riccelli leaves her locker to the Sanitation and Health Department. Mr. Kelley's Calculus class leaves him a helpful book entitled "How to Lie Your Way Out of Embarrassing Situations." Problems 401 leaves Mr. Roche a ten year supply of daily thoughts, along with much gratitude for the many fun-filled hours spent in Room 112.

English 401 leaves Mr. Hamilton a book entitled "1001 Generalizations" or "What Do You Mean By That?" Diane Houle and Bonnie Gamble leave Mr. Jones with the famous last words, "Crunch, mangle . . ." In conclusion, the senior class leaves much unsaid but little forgotten.

Class

The class of '68 was most definitely on the road to eternal damnation when it graduated, or so had Philip Krey darkly predicted. A very successful evangelist and always a loyal member of his class, it seemed odd that he hadn't shown up at the class reunion.

John Woodbury was already up in front of everybody, pounding a gavel for quiet so the reunion could officially start. The ever blond president of Lady Clairol, it seemed that John had hardly aged since his high school days. As usual, Pud Pratt, Dave Brown, Terry Quinlan, and Ralph DeLisle weren't paying any attention, reminiscent of high school classes. They were too busy passing out catalogues on the latest styles in bow ties for the company of which they are the board of directors. Speaking of trends in style, that new dress designer, famous creator of "Fashion by Merrill," was over in the corner taking orders like mad for sweaters and knitted dresses.

The class had its share of literary champions, too. Poet Buddy Williams has taken up residence in the Village, and Kenny Baldwin recently published his fifth best seller, "How to Make English Enjoyable." Unfortunately, Diane Houle and Debby Robbins are still starving in attics.

The class of '68 was priviledged to have its reunion attended by the President of the United States herself. Yes, men, it finally happened, and Susan Keane does make a very fine figure in the White House. Someone suggested that this would explain Dave Knight's absence from the reunion—something about his jumping from a ten story building.

Bonnie Gamble has become head of the Registry of Motor Vehicles and has finally been able to rescue us from all those little old ladies who are forever hot-rodding about town. Speaking of driving, many in the class were surprised to learn of Ann Ross's career as a cab driver in New York City, as feminine as she is.

The class of '68 wasn't without its television personalities and performers, either. T.V.'s latest hit is "Angela Ricelli's Comedy Hour," and just the other night Barbara Nelson played her tuba on "Merv Griffin." Dottie Berger can be seen on CBS every five or ten minutes advertising Listerine in her constant war against halitosis. Above all the laughter on "Gerhartz and Corcoran's Laugh-in" can be heard Kathy Lounsbury, now a professional giggler. Dave Bodenstein, Chuckie Gilbert, Dave Smallidge, and Dennis Downey have skyrocketed to fame as a mop-headed barbershop quartet. The class's potential always did lie primarily in the field of entertainment. Bobby Barnaby has brought out New York's Playboy Club. The club features bunny girls chosen by Jimmy Moore, well-versed in this field, as well as a striptease act by Bonnie "Bubbles" Drew, a continuation of the start she got in Mrs. Baran's French skits.

Prophecy

Kevin McMillan didn't make it to the reunion either. He just couldn't leave his witch doctor practice for that length of time. Pam Pearson has also gone into the field of medicine. Because of her talent for meeting people on their own level, Pam makes a great psychiatrist.

Believe it or not, some of the class was even religious. Unexpectedly following in the footsteps of his father Don Miller has gone into the ministry. Billy Walls has become a priest and Marsha Cantrell has entered a convent, a strange turn of events from being chosen class flirts.

The class of '68 had its athletic talents, too. The now 7′ 2″ Bobby McAllister is on the Celtics, and Clara Boyden, who profitted from the experience of her accident, set last year's skiing record in the Olympics. Donna Fagone and Betty Jacobsen are on the Olympic track team. What can you expect after all that practice running to lunch? Danny O'Connell and Hank Devlin didn't quite make the grade though. They're both now working as waterboys for the Patriots. Last but not least, Betty Smith has surprised Miss McCarthy and become a gym teacher.

Sadly enough, not all the class followed the straight and narrow. Donny White and Lynda Arsenault, assuming their rolls from the Senior Class Play, are the Bonnie and Clyde of today. It seems they have been arrested while holding up Zookie's Bubblegum Store. Which, by the way, really does exist. After receiving his eighteenth annual nomination for Teacher of the Year, "Big Daddy" Roche, as he is fondly known, retired from teaching and set up the infamous bubblegum store in a corner of the Wilmington Plaza. Dan Ferullo, John Fagone, Eddie Robicheau, and Rich McFeeters, for lack of something better to do, make up his loyal staff.

Remembering his sandbox days of summer school, Paul Campos has become head of a very large construction company. Barry Levaas earns his living by selling pacifiers, door to door. Beach bum Madeleine Curran is presently walking the beaches of the world, frantically being followed by Doug MacCallum trying to design a house that she will live in.

These are the fates of the members of the class of '68. The reunion was getting pretty well underway when all at once there was a roar of motorcycles and Jackie Gillis, Gary Irwin, Louis Maglio, and Jimmy Brewster burst through the doors—Hell's Angels themselves. Suddenly the room began to get very warm, and the members of the class of '68 remembered Philip's prediction and realized why he was not at the reunion.

Class History

In September, 1964, Wilmington High School knew little of the enthusiasm and energy of the class of '68. In October, class advisor, Mr. Coffin organized the class meeting in the small cafeteria. The prospective officers addressed the class and future plans were unfolded. It was at this meeting that the class of '68 first showed its worth—about $150 worth. Soon after, Ralph DeLisle was elected president; Chuck Nickerson, vice-president; Gary Irwin, secretary; and Fran McLean, treasurer. The rest of the year was spent attempting to amass an impressive figure in the treasury.

The '65–'66 school year dawned with increasing eagerness to succeed. The slate of candidates for the four offices was overwhelming. Not one office had less than four contenders. From that race, John Woodbury, Barbara Nelson, Wendy Atkinson, and Fran McLean emerged victorious as president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, respectively. Great participation was the keynote in the success of "Santa's Shindig" the first dance. Dues collection was on the rise and students began looking for more outlets for their class spirit.

In the Spring of 1966, that outlet came to be. Through the efforts of class advisor, Mr. Hansen, the class held an orderly Western Day. The only incident that day was the robbery of the 7:20 Boston and Maine Railroad Lowell to Boston run. The class that nobody wanted was quickly becoming the best class in the school.

Then, the work began. The junior year was upon the class of '68. The election of officers brought secretary Janet Parsons as the only new face among the officers. The Junior Dance, "Gobble a Go-Go" was successful. Spring followed winter and brought with it the Junior Prom. In the fashion of the class of 1968, the Junior Prom was a first—the first Junior Prom to be held somewhere other than the W.H.S. gym. "Moonlight and Roses" was well received and well attended.

Still not out of the spotlight, the juniors had their week. The juniors began with their Tuesday banquet, followed by Dress-up Day, Protest Day, and Crazy Day. The final stroke of the week was the twin performance Junior Variety Show.

In 1967, it was the last time around. Diane Johnson was elected secretary constituting the only change in class officers. An executive board was instituted to help out the class officers. The Yearbook staff was formed under the direction of Mrs. Hamilton and the co-editorship of Susan Keane and Betty Smith. Mr. Kelley became the new advisor.

The senior play, Anouilh's Thieves' Carnival, was an overwhelming success. In fact, the production amazed many people, including the cast and crew, and many even turned out both nights, just to see John Woodbury crumple up. The next move was the "Senior Class Dance" followed by a high school mixer on February 10th. Since then, the class of '68 has had cake sales, car washes, and other new and different fund-raising activities. In addition the U.N. trip was extended to two days.

The two big events, however, came back to back in one weekend. The Senior Prom was held at Montvale Plaza in Stoneham on June 7th. Graduation followed on June 9th. It was all over.
